

Consider the Lilies -- Sister Amelia Vance, October 2025

I want to speak this morning about the ordinary work of noticing. It is easy to believe that ministering is a program with a form to fill in. It is not. It is the practice of paying attention to the people who sit near you, week after week, until you know them.

When the Savior taught his disciples to consider the lilies, he was not asking them to admire a flower. He was asking them to notice how thoroughly they are provided for, and to let that noticing change how they carried their worry.

I have watched this ward do that quietly for years. A meal left on a step. A ride to an appointment nobody advertised needing. These are not small things dressed up as large ones. They are the thing itself.

May we continue to notice one another, and may we be slow to mistake activity for attention.
